High quality, relevant, and equitable collaborative international learning is a vital component of internationalization in higher education today. This interactive session will provide participants with the opportunity to explore issues of collaborative international learning from a variety of perspectives, ranging from the ‘conceptual’ to the more practical and hands-on. The discussion will touch on institutional, national, and systems-level considerations when it comes to building and sustaining collaborative international learning activities, while insights and examples from both Europe and India will provoke thinking about the important variables of national and regional context.
